Free linking policy: cover

1. This template legal document was produced and published by SEQ Legal LLP.
2. We control the copyright in this template, and you may only use this template in accordance with the licensing provisions in our terms and conditions. Those licensing provisions include an obligation to retain the SEQ Legal credit incorporated into the template.
3. The current version of our terms and conditions is available at: <https://seqlegal.com/our-terms-and-conditions>.
4. If you would like to use this template without the SEQ Legal credit, you can purchase a licence to do so at: <https://www.website-contracts.co.uk/seqlegal-licences.html>
5. You will need to edit this template before use. Guidance notes to help you do so are set out at the end of the template. During the editing process, you should delete those guidance notes and this cover sheet. Square brackets in the body of the document indicate areas that require editorial attention. "ORs" in the body of the document indicate alternative provisions. By the end of the editing process, there should be no square brackets left in the body of the document, and only one alternative from each set of alternatives should remain. Elements may be specified as optional in the accompanying notes, but that does not mean that they are in all cases removable. Depending upon the circumstances, an optional element may be: (i) required by law; or (ii) necessary to ensure that the document is internally consistent.
6. If you have any doubts about the editing or use of this template, you should seek professional legal advice.
7. You may be able to get free legal guidance using our public Q&A system, available at: <https://seqlegal.com/questions>.
8. You can request a quote for legal services (including the adaptation or review of a legal document produced from this template) using this form: <https://seqlegal.com/request-quote>.

Free linking policy: drafting notes

This is a free version of our regular linking policy. It has been created for website operators who want to set out, in detail, their policies relating to hyperlinking. The default provisions state a website's policies in relation to both links from the website and incoming links.

This type of legal notice is relatively unusual, but may nonetheless be useful in respect of some types of website.

NB There is some cross-over between the content of this document, and the treatment of user-provided content in many of our T&Cs of use for websites.
